

4 Different Types of Hippies

The Legend of Balinese DonMu – Book One (Part I of III) – Chapter 11

In the upper-left part of the main Ubud rectangle – if you go directly west for another kilometer or so – you’ll get to another part of Ubud where the local/permanent ex-pat hippies all live and hang out. This is like their Mecca. Their home. Not for the tourist hippies but for the long-term ex-pat hippies who’ve been living up there for God-only-knows how long and can drop like 10 hits of acid and talk to lizards, telepathically. They are hardcore. And pretty badass. You don’t want to mess with them. They know stuff. Like Third-Eye ayahuasca stuff.

Other types of hippies will venture up there too. But they’re not as hardcore or badass as the long-term/ex-pat hippies are. They’re more the tourist hippies. Or transitioning hippies.

Ubud attracts about four different types of hippies. 1.) The hardcore badass ones I just mentioned. 2.) The tourist hippies who only go up there on weekends or on vacation. 3.) The older hippies who live up there full-time and are left-over from the 60’s, 70’s & 80’s but never really became hardcore or badass. And 4.) The younger hippies who are just now starting out – and might either end up becoming hardcore and badass – or just drift into becoming old and non-badass.

The older, non-badass hippies though are still pretty awesome. And are really nice and friendly. Most of the older hippie guys are now bald but still have long hair in ponytails and like to sit around in circles – sometimes drum circles – listening to PBS/NPR radio, eating trail mix, and talking about the good old days and how they used to do things. But don’t really have that much energy in ‘em anymore, and seem to be at peace with that.

The older hippy women though, are quite the opposite – and are really awesome – because they still have that energy in ‘em. A strong sexual energy. And love nothing more than dressing up in loose billowy clothing, spraying on some patchouli oil and trying to get young hippie guys to bang ‘em. Cause if they can get a young hippie guy to come over, smoke some weed and talk about chakras/sexual healing and stuff, they can usually get ‘em to bang. And it’s a smart move too cause young hippie guys will pretty much bang anything if they can get free rent or weed out of it. They don’t really care.

The younger hippie girls though, are a bit different. And usually won’t bang the younger hippie guys. Mostly because A.) They know they’re already banging the older hippie women, and B.) They’re trying to bang the more hardcore/badass hippie guys – the ones who know the Third-Eye ayahuasca stuff – and can teach them things. Spiritually enlightened things. Which pretty much leaves the older hippie guys out in the cold. Cause no one wants to bang ‘em anymore. So they’re pretty much resigned to a life of PBS/NPR radio, trail mix, and a communal sexless existence. You know circle of life kind of stuff.

Hippies love banging. Maybe cause it’s free. Who knows? If I said that about a Jewish guy people would get all pissed. But hippies don’t really care. Plus, it’s one of the more popular things to do in the world and keeps it going. I mean besides food, water, and shelter, what’s the thing people want the most next? Sex? Love? Family? Friends? Three outta four of those involve banging. And hippies understand this. Just saying.

Occasionally you’ll find some hippies who are oddly angry. Which seems out of character for them, but it’s true. And some of these angry hippies are always talking about mainstream people and how we’re all the same.

“You’re all corporate drones, man. Living in your plastic world driving your metal coffins to your corporate mortuaries, man. All dressing the same, man.”

But make no mistake about it, there’s definitely a kind of hippie dress code too. With lots of man-buns, long hair, beards, earth-tone Hemp clothing, homemade jewelry, crystals, beads, and very specific tattoos and piercings. So let’s not kid anyone.

And I’m guilty too. I wear the same uniform every day as well. A gray t-shirt, tan cargo shorts, and flip flops. And really like it too. Growing up I used to wish we all had to wear school uniforms cause I hated having to pick out clothes every morning and just wanted to blend in and not get beat up.

At the very center of this hardcore/ex-pat hippie area is probably the most famous hippie hangout of all. A vegan restaurant called Zest. Which is like the consummate hangout/restaurant for all hippies in Ubud. Even the tourist hippies know about it and go there. Possibly to the dismay of the hardcore hippies, who knows?

It sits perched atop a hillside and is nestled in a grove of Banyan and Acacia trees and is buttressed by a yoga studio on one side and a Balinese temple on the other. So very conducive to the holistic nature of the place. And is rather impressive-looking too. No joke. With one tree cleverly-positioned in the middle – and built around – as kind of their holy tree. Or hippie shrine to the Oneness of the place.

There’s also a lot of tapestries on the walls, murals, eclectic paintings, mysterious drawings, and hippie flyers posted all around for anything from healing centers, to wellness retreats, to spiritual gurus, to meditation guides, and other niche hippie markets as well. Along with plenty of soft billowy-seating for long and comfortable stays. They really do encourage you to hang out and stay for a while. And the food of course is all vegan.

Wing felt tricked by me when he first saw the menu.

“Tofu?!” He groaned. “Uggghhhhhh ...”

I just smiled.